TOP-00043: Missing class for indicator field value [0] of type [1].

Cause: TopLink is missing the class for indicator field value classFieldvalue of type type. There was no class entry found in the inheritance policy for the indicator field value that was read from the database. It is likely that the method addClassIndicator(Class class, Object typeValue) was not called for the field value. The class and typeValue are stored in a hash table, and later the class is extracted from the hash table by passing typeValue as a key. Because Integer(1) is not equivalent to Float(1), this exception occurs when the type of typeValue is incorrectly specified.

If the primary keys are not specified, then the exception occurs.

TOP-00048: Multiple writable mappings exist for the field [{0}]. Only one may be defined as writable, all others must be specified read-only.

Cause: Multiple writable mappings for the field fieldName are defined in the descriptor. Exactly one must be defined as writable; the others must be specified as read-only. When multiple write mappings are defined for the field, TopLink is unable to choose the appropriate mapping for writing the value of the field in the database row. Therefore, the exception is raised during the validation process of descriptors. The most common cause of this problem is when the field has direct-to-field mapping, as well as one-to-one mapping. In this case, the one-to-one mapping must either be read-only or a target foreign key reference.

TOP-06004: The object [[0]], of class [[1]], with identity hashcode (System.identityHashCode()) [[2]], {3}is not from this UnitOfWork object space, but the parent session's. For more information, see the manual or FAQ.

Cause: The object clone of class clone.getClass() with identity hash code (System.identityHashCode()) (System.identityHashCode(clone)) is not from this unit of work space, but from the parent session. The object was never registered in this unit of work, but read from the parent session and related to an object

TOP-06005: The object [{0}], of class [{1}], with identity hashcode (System.identityHashCode()) [{2}], {3}is the original to a registered new object.
The UnitOfWork clones registered new objects, so you must ensure that an object {3}is registered before it is referenced by another object. If you do not want the new object to be cloned, use the(UnitOfWork.registerNewObject(Object) API. If you are still having problems, you can use the UnitOfWork.validateObjectSpace() {3}method to help debug where the error occurred. For more information, see the manual or FAQ.

Cause: The object clone of class clone.getClass() with identity hash code (System.identityHashCode()) (System.identityHashCode(clone)) is the original to a registered new object. Because the unit of work clones new objects that are registered, ensure that an object is registered before it is referenced by another object. If you do not want the new object to be cloned, use the registerNewObject(Object) method of the UnitOfWork.

Action: Verify that you are correctly registering your objects. If you are still having problems, use the validateObjectSpace method of the UnitOfWork to help debug where the error occurred.

WWC-40018: General invalidation message processing exception: %1

Cause: One of the following occurred:

- An error occurred when an invalidation message was sent. This can occur when Oracle Web Cache goes down, or is stopped while Oracle Portal writes an invalidation message to the Oracle Web Cache invalidation port. Some other unexpected exception occurred while processing an invalidation message.

Action: Ensure that Oracle Web Cache is running and the invalidation port is accepting connections.

Level: 1
Type: ERROR
Impact: Other

WWC-40019: cannot open Oracle Web Cache connection

Cause: Oracle Portal was not able to send the invalidation message to Oracle Web Cache. This can happen if one or more of the following occurred:

- There was a problem in connecting to Oracle Web Cache from the host running the Portal database. An intermittent network issue could have caused this error. Or, the Oracle Web Cache host cannot be reached. Verify that the Portal database host can consistently resolve and ping the Oracle Web Cache host. If a firewall exists between the two hosts, ensure that the firewall allows invalidation messages to pass through.
- Oracle Web Cache was not running. It might have been stopped, or restarted at the time when the invalidation messages were sent by Oracle Portal or providers. Or, Oracle Web Cache might have failed.
- Oracle Web Cache invalidation port problems were encountered. This can happen if the Oracle Web Cache invalidation port value used by Oracle Portal is different from the actual Oracle Web Cache invalidation port. Try restarting the Oracle Portal OC4J instance to see if this helps.
- Another process used the Oracle Web Cache invalidation port before Oracle Web Cache started listening on it.
- Issues with the Oracle Web Cache invalidation password were encountered. Possibly, the Oracle Web Cache invalidator password value in Oracle Portal was different from the actual Oracle Web Cache invalidator password.

Action: Verify the cause of this behavior and take the appropriate corrective action.

Impact: Other

WWC-40064: Error invalidating content: Invalid user name/password passed to Oracle Web Cache
