OSB-381410: The ws-policy of the WS business service requires HTTPS BASIC authentication but no service account has been configured Cause: An HTTPS BASIC authentication policy requires the endpoint to send a username/password when connecting to the back-end service. A service account specifies how to get the username/password and allows the endpoint to get the username/password. This endpoint is configured for outbound HTTPS BASIC authentication but the service account reference is null.
Action: Configure a service account reference in the endpoint configuration page.
Level: 1

Cause: WS transport proxy services which require username/password (i.e. BASIC) authentication cannot be invoked from another proxy or from the test console.
Action: Check the message flow configuration and make sure there are no proxy-to-proxy routes where the target proxy service is a WS transport endpoint with BASIC authentication. Also, whenever using the test console to test such a WS transport proxy, make sure you set the "direct call" check-box to true.

OSB-381415: X.509 token identity assertion is not enabled in the security realm. An identity asserter with X.509 token support enabled is required because ws proxy service "{0}" has a ws-policy which requires CLIENT-CERT authentication

Type: ERROR
Impact: Security

OSB-381417: WS transport proxy "[0]" is configured with client-certificate-required policy and is deployed in a cluster. There is typically a load-balancer between the client and the cluster. The load balancer forwards client-certificates to the server, but the server will only honor this certificate if it is configured with "Client Cert Proxy Enabled", otherwise the certificate will be ignored and the request will fail.

Cause: Typically, when a WS transport proxy is configured with client-certificate-required policy and is deployed in a cluster, the managed servers must be configured with "Client Cert Proxy Enabled". This is so that the managed servers will honor the certificate in the "WL-Proxy-Client-Cert" HTTP header. Make sure to read the section on SSL configuration in WebLogic Server documentation when using this feature.

Action: Set "Client Cert Proxy Enabled" to true in the WLS console. This can be done at the cluster level or individually for each managed server in the cluster. Make sure to read the section on SSL configuration in WebLogic Server documentation when using this feature. Use a weblogic.security.net.ConnectionFilter to ensure that this WebLogic Server instance accepts connections only from the machine on which the proxy-server plugin is running, otherwise you will create a security vulnerability because the WL-Proxy-Client-Cert header can be spoofed.

OSB-386041: key-pair binding with alias "{1}" and purpose "{2}" , but there is no such key-pair binding in the PKI Credential Mapper Provider in your security realm Cause: In older release of ALSB (2.0 and 2.1), ALSB did not include the password to service key provider key-pair credentials in exported configuration jar files.
When such a service key provider is later imported into subsequent releases, OSB expects the key-pair binding to already be present in the PKI Credential Mapper Provider. To do that, you would export the PKI Credential Mapper Provider data from your previous domain and import it into your new domain. NOTE: It is recommended that you instead re-configure this service key provider credentials, that way OSB will keep an encrypted copy of the key-pair’s password and this error will not happen again

OSB-398060: The ws-policy of operation "[1]" in proxy service "[0]" contains a counterfeit confidentiality assertion. Confidentiality assertions assigned to proxy services must be abstract, the encryption certificate must not be embedded in the policy.

Cause: The proxy service is a WS-Security (web services security) active intermediary. Its ws-policy includes a "confidentiality" assertion (this is a Oracle-proprietary policy assertion which specifies that the client must encrypt the request message). This confidentiality assertion is concrete. That means the policy includes a base-64 encoded certificate (in the /wssp:Confidentiality/wssp:KeyInfo/wssp:SecurityTokenReference/wssp:Embedded/wsse:BinarySecurityToken element). Proxy services should not have concrete confidentiality assertions on its policy because the proxy's encryption certificate is assigned through a service key provider.

(this is a Oracle-proprietary policy assertion which specifies that request messages to this service must be encrypted). This confidentiality assertion is abstract. That means the policy does not include an embedded base-64 encoded server certificate. The confidentiality assertion must be concrete.

Action: Make the policy concrete. To do this edit the policy and make sure there are SecurityToken and SecurityTokenReference child elements inside the /wssp:Confidentiality/wssp:KeyInfo element. The value of the SecurityTokenReference element is an embedded base-64 encoded server

OSB-398140: Proxy service "[0]" is a passive wss intermediary. The ws-policy of operation "[1]" contains an abstract confidentiality assertion but the proxy service does not have a service key provider reference or the referenced service key provider does not have an encryption credential. You will be able to invoke this proxy service but its effective WSDL will not have an encryption certificate. Clients must get this certificate out-of-band.
Cause: A passive WSS intermediary is a proxy service which has a WS-Security policy in its public WSDL (i.e., its "effective" WSDL), but which does not perform any WS-Security processing. It simply relays the security header to a back-end service. Whenever a passive WSS intermediary has an "abstract confidentiality" policy, the proxy should have a service key provider which, in turn, must have an encryption credential. This encryption credential will be then inlined in the effective WSDL.

Action: Edit the proxy service. In the security tab, choose a service key provider (the service key provider must have an encryption credential).
